affected areas also the overall level of the extremist violence has, more or less, remained at a similar level in the last few years and, has in fact, shown improvement in a number of areas, but for a few major incidents in some States like Chhattisgarh, Jharkhand, etc. As far as terrorism in the hinterland is concerned, some incidents have occurred in different States.

Action taken by the Government to tackle terrorism includes urging the State Governments to take focused and coordinated measures to deal with the situation, and providing all possible help in this regard. Close coordination is being maintained between the Central and State agencies, including regular sharing of information and intelligence. As a result, a large number of terrorist modules have been busted and possible major terrorist incidents averted Institutional arrangements have also been put in place so that sharing and analysis of information and intelligence can be done on a continuing basis in a systematic and coordinated manner. The State Governments have also been urged to strengthen the State police forces by filling up vacancies and improving the police: population ratio, as also to take special measures to strengthen their intelligence set up. Assistance for these purposes is also been given under the Police Modernisation Scheme, under which the States have also been asked to prepare sub-plans for strengthening the intelligence related arrangements for which the assistance of Central agencies is also provided. All this is in addition to deployment of Central forces to assist the civil authorities in the States, liberal sanctions for raising of India Reserve (IR) battalions and assistance for general and specialized training for the State security forces.
